

CCRI Hands-on online workshop series

From ambition to action

From peer exchange to practical action

You're not alone! Cities and regions across Europe are facing similar challenges - at different stages and in different contexts - when implementing the circular transition. Over the past year, CCRI communities of practice have brought practitioners together to openly share what works, what doesn't, and where they get stuck. This CCRI online workshop series builds directly on these insights, turning peer exchange into practical, hands-on sessions designed to help you move from ambition to concrete actions - no matter where you are in your transition.

What makes these workshops different?

- Built on real practitioner experiences in the communities of practice.
- Focused on real implementation challenges faced by cities and regions.
- Interactive, hands-on and completely practical.
- No jargon. No long lectures. Just focused, useful work.
- Led by facilitators who work directly with cities and regions.

What you'll leave with:

- Concrete examples of how other European cities and regions have responded and are responding to challenges.
- Tested approaches on dealing with implementation barriers.
- A practical method, tool or framework ready for you to apply.
- A space to connect and network with peers across Europe.

Who's it for?

All city and regional practitioners. In short, these are for you if you:

- are involved in implementing circular economy strategies or actions;
- are working in a territory implementing circular economy ambitions;
- want practical ways to better implement your circular transition.

Format

- Fully online
- Stand-alone thematic workshops
- 2 hours per session
- Free of charge.
